Historical note:

The Center for Advanced Visual Studies (CAVS) was founded at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in 1967 by Professor György Kepes. Kepes first arrived at MIT in 1946 to teach visual communications. Kepes' arrival found MIT focused primarily on engineering and science, and not art. He noted that new directions in the world of art would rely on scientific expertise, and proposed that artists and scientists could bring a sense of balance to each others' fields. This was a core concept behind the founding of the Center, which was ultimately dedicated in 1968 with the Center for Theoretical Physics.

Kepes' goals for the Center included emphasizing collaborative across previously disparate fields in order to seek out the potential of emerging technologies in the process of creating works of art on a civic scale. To this end, artists, scientists, engineers, and designers would be selected to come to the Center as fellows, and pursue both individual and collaborative projects. Many of the first generation of CAVS Fellows focused on techniques and technologies such as light art and kinetic sculpture.

In 1974, the first international CAVS Fellow, Otto Piene, took over the role of director after Kepes' retirement. Piene would direct the Center for 20 years until his own retirement in 1994. Piene's leadership saw a new era of CAVS- a formalization of the academic program as the Master of Science in Visual Studies became MIT's first graduate degree in the arts. CAVS Fellows took part in more frequent and higher profile projects, such as the Centerbeam kinetic sculpture featured at documenta 6 in 1977 and again on the National Mall at Washington, DC in 1978. The Center also hosted a series of conferences on Sky Art (a term coined by Piene to describe projects using the sky and space as a canvas and/or medium) in the 1980s. During Piene's tenure, the scope of technologies explored by CAVS Fellows broadened to include steam, laser, holography, environmental sculpture, computer graphics and animation, video, laserdisc, sound, performance, dance, and more.

Following Piene's retirement, CAVS had a series of directors that included previous Fellow and Director of Projects Elizabeth Goldring, Professor and Fellow Paul Earls, holographer Steve Benton, and Krzysztof Wodiczko.

In 2010, MIT merged the Center with the Visual Arts Program (VAP) to form the Program in Art, Culture & Technology (ACT). ACT manages and processes the legacy materials from the Center, formally named the Center for Advanced Visual Studies Special Collection in 2012.

Scope and Contents of the Collection

The collection document boxes contain documents covering the administrative records and facilities of the Center, its projects, individuals associated with the CAVS, correspondence, academic programming, publicity from events and exhibitions, and images of individuals, projects, and events. The collection also contains audio and videotape, as well as works on paper, which include portfolios of collaborative work and posters that trace the history of Center events, exhibitions, and academic programming.

Arrangement note

Wherever possible, the Center's records have been kept in their original order. The series of individuals' records was found to have been spread out among other collection materials over time, and was rearranged to reflect the original intent of the collection after consulting with former CAVS staff. The series are as follows: Series 1, Administrative and Facilities records; Series 2, Correspondence; Series 3, Academic Program files; Series 4, Projects; Series 5, Individuals; Series 6; Publicity materials; Series 7, Images; Series 8, Works on Paper; Series 9, Media.

Series #2: Correspondence

Scope and Contents note:

This series includes top-level correspondence to and from the Center. "Top-level" refers to correspondence to and from the CAVS director at the time of writing. Correspondence prior to 1974 will involve the first director, Gyorgy Kepes. 1974-1994 covers the term of Otto Piene. There is no correspondence in this series from later CAVS directors.

Arrangement note:

Correspondence between individual CAVS Fellows and their director may be found within the records of the individual Fellows in Series 5. Correspondence related to specific projects may be found in Series 4. The correspondence of directors after Otto Piene's term is also located within those individuals' records in Series 5.

Series #3: Academic Program Files

Scope and Contents note:

This series contains records of the academic programming of the Center for Advanced Visual Studies.

Historical note:

The Center for Advanced Visual Studies was developed initially as a fellowship program. However, many CAVS Fellows also taught courses at MIT. By 1974, a degree program was developed- the Master of Science in Visual Studies. Although some CAVS Fellows were also professors at MIT, their function as lecturers or instructors was secondary to their role as a Fellow. Both graduate and undergraduate students were able to take courses at the Center, and CAVS Fellows also taught summer sessions and courses during the Independent Activities Period, MIT's annual month of short classes held in January.

		Subseries: CAVS Course files by academic semester Scope and Contents note: General semester course files typically contain descriptions of course offerings, faculty bios, gradesheets, promotional materials, course schedules, syllabi, and other supplemental course materials such as readings. Folders for specific courses listed here typically contain similar information, and are more likely to contain supplemental course materials such as readings, special event materials, project outlines and proposals. The specific courses here are not a complete list of all courses taught at CAVS. Semester course books and the general semester course information (below) should be consulted to gain a full understanding of CAVS academic offerings. Access note: Materials in this subseries that contain certain identifying information on student records (such as gradesheets) are restricted to internal access only.

Series #4: Projects

Box Folders Inventory

7	15	Sao Paulo Bienal / Explorations, 1970 Historical note: The first group show for CAVS was intended to be the 1970 Sao Paulo Bienal. However, the contributing artists felt that the political turmoil in Brazil was antithetical to their participation and withdrew from the Bienal in protest. CAVS Director Gyorgy Kepes arranged for the CAVS group show to instead be curated in two locations in the United States: MIT's Hayden Gallery, which would be the site of many CAVS group and individual shows to come, and the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, D.C. Both shows had the title Explorations and used the same exhibition catalog, although some works and contributions were different in each show. As the first group show of CAVS Fellows, Explorations was meant to be a public culmination of the first several years of creativity and development at the Center. Scope and Contents note: Folder components include: Correspondence, 1969-1970; Budgets; Press releases; Articles and newsclippings covering the Sao Paulo withdrawal, and both Explorations shows; Artist statements (group and individual) regarding the decision to withdraw from the Sao Paulo show; Project log of Director's phone calls and meetings; Correspondence, press release and proposal for a Sky Event by CAVS Fellow Otto Piene; Lists of committed artists for Explorations; Exhibition space layouts and floorplans; Technical information, sketches, and descriptions for works; Document detailing the hierarchy of roles for coordinating the exhibitions; Exhibition catalog. Arrangement note: Other folders covering this topic may be found later in this series.
7	5	Centerbook, 1970 Historical note: Centerbook was an attempt to create a book describing the mission and work of the CAVS. The project did not come to fruition, although many of the ideas generated during correspondence and discussions for this project were later implemented in CAVS monographs that were published. Scope and Contents note: Folder components include: Drafts of essays by various CAVS Fellows; Descriptions of individual and group works; Correspondence regarding technical ideas by artists, ca1970; Correspondence with contributing scientists, 1970; Proposed outline for Centerbook and essay by Ted Kraynick, Synergy, Art and Society; Correspondence with a potential author, Louis Vaczek, including essays and outlines, 1972-1973.

Series 5: Individuals

Scope and Contents note:

This series contains documents pertaining to individuals associated with the Center for Advanced Visual Studies. Individuals were most commonly affiliated as “Fellows,” a fellowship which was a research staff appointment. Other affiliations included Research Affiliate, which was treated similarly to a fellowship and is referred to as such; Visiting Artist, Visiting Scholar, Guest of the Institute, and graduate student. Students included in this series also held fellowships.

The biographical notes describe, when known, an individual’s affiliation with the Center, as well as their area of practice (techniques/technologies employed or explored during their affiliation with the Center).

Scope and Contents notes cover the components found in each folder. Work statements are typically a short description of a work, and may include a sketch or diagram. Images of work may be slides or photographs, or other printed materials that visually communicate the work of a Fellow.

Arrangement note:

This series is arranged alphabetically by individuals’ last names. Student records are found in the Academics series.

Access note:

Human Resources files are restricted due to the nature of personal information included (ex: Social Security numbers).

Interview transcripts of CAVS FellowsScope and Contents note:

Compiled transcripts from interviews with CAVS Fellows.

Historical note:

In the 2000s, CAVS Fellow Joan Brigham interviewed numerous former CAVS Fellows about their experiences at the Center. Fellows would record on audiotape a personal history of how they came to the Center, the work they accomplished as a Fellow, and their understanding of what the Center meant as an institution. Joan Brigham transcribed the interviews and provided both the audio tapes and the transcripts to the CAVS Special Collection.

Processing note:

These materials are being digitized. Transcripts have been scanned to PDF and are available on request. Audio files from digitized tapes will be made publicly available in 2015.
